The Question of the Airport
Has Two Sides

CONSIDERABLE agitation has been stirred up lately regarding the municipal airport, several organizations having gone on record, endorsing the purchase.

From an advertising or investment standpoint, the purchase is undoubtedly a good one, but is that the point in question?

The only question, as we see it, is: Has the city council legal right to purchase land, without the taxpayers giving the authority to do so through a bond issue?

There has been a great deal of grumbling over our high tax rate, and this was, without doubt, caused by the money which was set aside for land purchases. If it is the people's wish that the council should buy parks and airports, or land for other purposes, well and good. If so, they should not grumble over the high tax rate, or endeavor to annex to Los Angeles on account of it.

THERE has been so much loose talk on these purchases, and especially the airport, that we think our city council would not only welcome but insist on an investigation. Nothing will clear the atmosphere except a decision by the court. A principle is now involved, and for the best interests of Glendale's future we should get a decision which will settle the matter for all time. Any attempt to quash the proceedings now under way will leave the transaction in doubt and up to conjecture as to the reason for the compromise.

Let's have a definite decision by the judge and afterwards balance the account so far as the legality of the park purchases is concerned. Even if a decision is rendered against the purchase, this does not mean the loss of the field or park, if the people want them.

There can be no question over the legality of a purchase of land if it is authorized by a bond issue, and we can see no reason why an election cannot be called.

The injunction does not prohibit a sale of this property—it only prohibits the paying out of any more money for it. If an election is called to vote on a bond issue to purchase both Glendale-Verdugo park and the airport property, the people would have an opportunity of registering either their approval or disapproval of the purchases.

THERE is very little difference of opinion over the wisdom of giving any city council the power to spend $126,000 of the citizens' money without first getting an expression from them as to their wishes. Both of these purchases were made without any publicity to speak of. Regardless of how you look at the benefit accruing to Glendale by the purchases, do you want to help set a precedent which permits an unlimited expenditure of the taxpayers' money, without their knowledge or consent.

COL. EVERINGTON
TO BE CANDIDATE FOR SECRETARY

Complies With Request of Friends That He Seek the Office

Urged by his friends, Col. James W. Everington announced today the candidacy for the position of secretary of the chamber of commerce. His announcement was picked up today and carried throughout the city as the solution to the pending problem of securing a successor to James M. Rhoades, secretary, who resigned, to take effect April 1.

Colonel Everington is a Glendale citizen. He has been closely identified with public movements, the community service and has given freely of his time to aid in public affairs at the call of the chamber of commerce, the city council, the community service. He is one of the most ardent anti-annexationists in the city.

Colonel Everington came into public notice about a year ago, when insisting upon a square operation of the Los Angeles police department, of which he had been appointed chief, he was unable to obtain support and resigned rather than submit to the conditions as he found them.

Colonel Everington was born in Milwaukee in 1878. When four years of age he moved to Minneapolis, Minn., where he received his education. In 1901 he received the degree of civil engineer at the University of Minnesota and later worked for the Great Northern railroad. He received his commission as second lieutenant from Colonel Roosevelt in 1902.

Colonel Everington has served with the United States army in the Philippines, Alaska and all over the world during the World War. He retired from the army in 1920, coming direct to Glendale at that time.

GLENDAL TEAM DEFEATED BY PICO OUTFIT

Indians Make Game Fight and Lose By One Run

In a very fast and interesting game at the Park and San Fernando grounds the Glendale team was beaten by one lone run, the final score being 3-2.

"Slim" Harris, the star hurler, pitched wonderful ball for the locals, striking out 12 men and allowing but 5 hits, but that wasn't enough to stop the fast fielding Pico Stars.

Frank Acosta, the star 3rd sacker, had a good day. He handled four hard chances perfectly, including the feature catch of the day, reaching around the airplanes to nab a fast one. He also made a 2-base hit.

Manager "Walt" Heidler also made a good catch. While playing in the center garden he raced in at top speed and grabbed a high fly at second base.

This game, even if the home team had the large crowd of cheering fans well pleased with the showing they made.

Five Hundred Automobiles Line Side of Field on San Fernando Road While Many Watch
Planes From Their Homes

ONE ACCIDENT AT FIELD MARKS THE DAY

Spectators Get Into the Path of Big Curtis Plane
When It Is About to Make a Landing, and Aviator Turns Into Fence

Amid a haze of smoke, a cloud of dust and a roar of powerful motors, the Glendale airport was formally opened on Saturday.

More than 5000 people were present. Probably 500 automobiles were lined up, side by side, on the field and along San Fernando road. It is estimated that 5000 additional residents of Glendale watched the maneuvers of the sky pilots from their homes.

There was only one accident during the day. This occurred at 3:45, when J. B. Hill, driving a J. N. 4-D Curtis plane hurtled the fence and landed in the soft earth of the vineyard closely. R. E. Spence was the passenger in the car when it "flipped."

This mishap was caused by three pedestrians—two men and a boy. These three were right in the center of the field when Hill tried to effect a landing. It was a question of either hit the three and probably kill them or attempt to take to the air again.

Hill chose the latter, but when he started up again his motor began to miss and he was compelled to drop to the ground. The second attempt was too close to the south end of the field for landing to be completed. The plane tore through the wooden fence and out into the sootily plowed field.

The plane could not stand the strain, and gave way. This rammed the nose of the plane into the soft earth. For a moment the plane stood on its nose, then it settled back—right side up. The damage done amounted to about $400. The propeller, one side of the left lower wing and the running gear were broken. The occupants of the car were not hurt.

There were eight United States army planes present. At about 2 o'clock two squads of four planes each appeared over the Griffith park hills and a few minutes later were cutting formation capers over the city. During the afternoon these planes performed stunts and additional aerial features.

There were about thirty planes on the field when the meet was at its height. Many of these were commercial planes and there were also a number of private cars.

Lieut. Corliss Mosley, commander of the reserve army planes at Clover field, Santa Monica, was in charge of the army fliers.

Among the army men who came up were Lieut. Roy Gradel, Lieut. White and Lieut. Fry of company 478, pursuit squad, and passengers.

Lieut. Alvin W. Makepeace, flight commander and Kenneth W. Monte of the 513th observation squad, and passengers.

Lieut. Corning of the 312th Army Park squadron and passenger; Lieut. Remlin of the 367th observation squad, and passenger.

Among the commercial and private planes present were those of Earl S. Daugherty, Long Beach, who was accompanied by five of his pupils and their ships; L. C. Brand, with his two sport planes; Dr. T. C. Young with Reeves Darling, pilot; Mr. Carr, editor of The Ace magazine; Mr. Waterman, of Covina; Victor H. Stahlili, of Glendale; Aviator Kinner, of Glendale; I. L. Shogran and passenger; H. Hamlin and Leon T. Ellet of the Photo-Map company, Pasadena, and others.

Aviators Shogran and Hamlin were field managers for the day. Every army and civilian flyer interviewed during the day by the Glendale Press representative was very enthusiastic over the Glendale airport. They claim it is the finest in Southern California, and that it will be patronized by practically all of the flyers of this section. The army aviators also signified their intention of using the field whenever in this section.

ST. PATRICK'S
LUNCHEON AT
TUESDAY CLUB

Nets Club $300 for Fund for Lounge Room of Non-Section Folks

An altogether delightful social affair was the St. Patrick's luncheon and card party given by non-section members of the Tuesday Afternoon club at the new clubhouse on Saturday. It netted about $300 for the fund, which this group is accumulating to pay for the furnishing of the lounge room, about 360 being present, all the banquet room would accommodate.

Mrs. A. H. Montgomery, first vice president and chairman of ways and means, had general charge of the function, assisted by Mrs. Thomas G. Widmeyer, Mrs. Horace Moore, Mrs. C. F. Parker, Mrs. C. P. Jones, Mrs. H. F. McCormick, Mrs. F. M. Coulter, Mrs. W. E. Pelley, Mrs. J. H. Cole, Mrs. J. H. Searles, Mrs. F. M. Peckham, Mrs. Henry Greenwalt, Mrs. F. H. Evans.

The tables were decorated in green and white in deference to the colors of the patron saint of Ireland, and Mrs. Daniel Campbell, president of the club, was guest of honor. At each place was a green paper shamrock to be pinned upon the gown of the guest.

Mrs. Montgomery was the recipient of a very beautiful bouquet of spring flowers presented to her by Mrs. Campbell, with words of appreciation of her service.

The luncheon was delicious and was expertly served by daughters of members who wore green and white fillets as their insignia of service. The girls were Misses Margaret Longley, Dorothy Houston, Evelyn Hunt, Leona Hunt, Emma Laura Cooper, Zelma Bunting, Catherine Guthrie, Ruth Dana, Lillian Owens, Winifred Parker, Dorothy Syms, Dorothy Salyer, Isabel Hicks, Valera Trimmer, and Mary Elizabeth O'Connell.

As one of the events to come Mrs. Montgomery announced a zee club concert to be given by the Stanford club under the auspices of the Central avenue P.T. A. to be followed by a dance given by the non-section group with the Stanford boys and the girls who helped serve the luncheon as guests of honor.

Mrs. Montgomery also announced a tea to be given by members of the Shakespeare section April 23, as a benefit for the table silver fund. The concert to be given by the Music section March 22 was referred to, and the card party to be given by the year book and membership committee March 21.

To demonstrate how it was possible for the club to give such a luncheon and realize so handsome a profit upon it, Mrs. Montgomery explained that the tuna used in the escalloped dish, the olives, strawberry preserves and the fruit cocktail were furnished by the Braden Preserving company of Pasadena to advertise their wares, without charge. Other donations were received from the Pacific Coast Biscuit company, Thompson Creamery company, Clover Glen Butter company, Wholesale Biscuit company, Jensen Bakery, the Calla Lily and Jessup Creamery companies, Chase & Sanborn company, and the Glendale book store.

Mrs. C. F. Parker and Mrs. J. R. Cole had charge of the card tables in the reception hall, lounge and foyer.

The members of the Harrower Laboratory baseball team "whitewashed" the Glendale Postoffice nite by a score of 21 to 0 at the game yesterday, played at the diamond at Park avenue and San Fernando road. Bud Smith was on the mound for the Harrower aggregation and pitched a very fine game, having the opposing batters entirely at his mercy and striking out several of them. Only one man reached third base. Two running catches of long drives deep into the outfield by Fisher and Smith of the winners were features of the game. The lineup was as follows:

REV. DR. GRANT MIDDLE WEST IS TAKES ISSUE WITH BISHOP IN GRIP OF THE BLIZZARD

Comments on Recent Divorce Sermon of Manning

[By Associated Press]
NEW YORK, March 19.—Quoting from the recent sermon on divorce in which Bishop Manning said "last only while love lasts, means in reality that marriage does not exist at all," the Rev. Dr. Percy Stickney Grant, addressing his congregation in the Church of the Ascension, said yesterday: "I never heard such an expression from the pulpit."
"If you read that backwards it means that after marriage love does not exist."

STORMS MOVE EASTWARD

[By Associated Press]
WASHINGTON, March 19.—Winter's final blast, which has been attended by blizzards and near zero temperatures in the middle west will overspread the east and south tonight, but relief is promised by Wednesday.
The cold wave from the northwest will rapidly envelop the east and south tonight, the weather bureau says, as far south as Palm Beach.
A storm of marked intensity is central over northwestern New York today and moving rapidly northeastward. Another disturbance of wide extent and considerable energy is moving southeastward over the Canadian Northwest. Today the severe cold wave had overspread the lake region, the great central valley and the middle west gulf states. Freezing weather was reported as far south as Galveston, Texas. At Port Smith, Ark., the thermometer registered 10 degrees above zero. Many stations in the middle west reported today the lowest temperatures ever recorded so late in the season.

GERMAN EDITORS JAILED BY FRENCH

[By Associated Press]
COBLENZ, March 19.—Of the 1450 newspapers published in the Rhineland and the Ruhr, 455 have been suppressed by the occupation authorities for periods varying from three days to several months, according to semi-official German figures. Suspensions in the Rhineland total 298. Forty-three of the journals have more than once been forbidden to publish, while 63 newspapers printed outside these areas have been denied the right to circulate in occupied territory.
Prison sentences running as high as 18 months and fines of as much as 1,000,000 marks have been imposed on 83 editors and 61 publishers. Eighteen editors and nineteen publishers have been deported with their families.

FRANCO-GERMAN KILLINGS

[By Associated Press]
DUESSELDORF, March 19.—The killing of a French soldier and a German civilian at Essen and the announcement that the German mine owners had been allowed until April 15 to pay the 40 per cent coal tax, were outstanding developments in the Ruhr situation over the week-end.

The soldier was shot at the Essen railway station. A German who endeavored to escape was wounded so badly that he died. Three others were arrested on suspicion.
French headquarters announces that the first of the penalties recently threatened if the mine owners failed to pay the coal tax had been invoked and that in some instances export license was being withheld.

RUSSIA READY TO PAY—MAYBE

[By Associated Press]
NEW YORK, March 19.—Senator Borah of Idaho at a mass meeting in Madison Square Garden, declared that Russia appeared about as ready to pay her debt to the United States as some other European nations.

McTIGUE NOT CHAMP

[By Associated Press]
PARIS, March 19.—No world's championship was involved in the Siki-McTigue fight at Dublin last Saturday, according to Albert Bourdariat, vice president of the French Boxing Federation, in a statement to L'Aurore.

"In the first place," the official said, "the rules require that an adversary of a champion must challenge formally, which McTigue never did. Secondly, the referee must be appointed by the International Boxing Union. This condition was also unfulfilled."
He concluded that Siki may have been beaten by McTigue, but he cannot lose his title of light heavyweight champion because the fight was not for the title.

UNCLE SAM DECLINES

[By Associated Press]
PARIS, March 19.—A refusal by the United States to accept the terms of its bill for the expenses of the American army of occupation by the value of the German ships seized in American ports was presented today to the allied representatives in conference here on the reimbursement question, by Elliot Wadsworth, assistant secretary of the treasury.

LABOR RESERVE DEMAND

[By Associated Press]
WASHINGTON, March 19.—Secretary Hoover has recommended to President Harding that all government building and construction work should be slowed down in order to form a reserve demand for labor and materials when the present high tide of private construction has begun to meet the country's needs.

BIG TIMBER IN ARIZONA

TUCSON, Ariz., March 19.—Arizona forests produced 950,000 feet of timber during the year ending December 31, last, according to a statement by William H. Killen, member of a large southern Arizona lumber company, with headquarters here, in an address given before the Rotarian organization.
Of Arizona's forest supply, Mr. Killen said in part:
"It is estimated by the Forestry department that Arizona has 5,000,000 acres of forest land, producing about 5,000 feet to the acre." And in pointing out necessity for forest protection and transplanting of that portion now cleared, he added: "At the rate at which the timber was cut during the past century, the supply will have become exhausted in approximately twenty years."

KI-YI BLUE BLOODS AT PORTLAND SHOW

PORTLAND, Ore., March 19.—This city is going to enjoy about the loudest ki-yi in a dozen years when the dog show opens the afternoon of March 29, ten days from now. It is the first dog show Portland's Kennel club has arranged in the memory of the oldest dogs in the city and its environs. The last big exhibit was staged in 1912.

The entry list closed today and it was announced that approximately 400 dogs, come with thoroughbred pedigrees stretching back to the pair that came down the gangplank of the ark and others whose cross-sections would reveal a pattern of more variegated design than a crazy quilt, would take part in the big exhibit.

One old man in Southern Oregon wrote to C. S. Whitmore, show secretary, making inquiry concerning a place on the bench for his dog, as follows:
"I know 'Ned' is a thoroughbred, but I have no pedigree for him. Anyway, we're good pals and think a lot of each other. If he wins a ribbon or a cup we will always keep it where we can look at it. Ned and I, but if he doesn't win a thing I will know he did his best."
A goodly percentage of the dogs entered are mere canines between whose masters and them exists a high mutual regard. That is about all the recommendation they possess.

The success of the show is predicted because dog fanciers all over the Pacific Northwest have been invited to bring their dogs to compete. The generous scope of the invitations has met with universal approval.

John C. Fletcher of Calgary, Alberta, who will judge all breeds to be shown at the Auditorium, where the show will be held, will call the first class into the ring at 2.30, on the afternoon of March 29, the opening day.

OSAGE ORANGE—TOUGHEST WOOD

TUCSON, Ariz., March 19.—A report on durability tests of the various native woods of this country, received recently by local Forest Service officials, discloses the fact that Osage Orange, which is extremely used in Arizona as a hedge, holds first place in this regard, while pine, fir and juniper, found in this state, follow in a creditable showing.

The experiments made for the purpose of ascertaining what native woods, without special treatment and in their natural state, possessed the greatest durability, were conducted at the forest products laboratory maintained by the Forest Service at Madison, Wis., where all kinds of experiments with forest timber are carried on.

On a basis of 100 per cent for white oak, according to the report, Osage Orange was found to rate at from 200 to 300 per cent, making it especially valuable as fence post material, where length of life is desired. Of the other woods found in Arizona, yellow pine was rated at from 35 to 40 per cent and Douglas fir at from 75 to 85 per cent, while juniper showed a good degree of durability.

The tests also showed that the wood of the ubiquitous mesquite tree, when immunized against the boring insect, which attacks the natural, unseasoned wood, makes a fence-post of long-lasting quality. It is now utilized to a great extent in this section for that purpose.

SOLES AS PART WAGES

[By Associated Press]
LONDON, March 19.—It costs 110,000 marks to have half soles nailed on shoes in Germany now because of the extremely high price of leather. This is about half the monthly salary of the average domestic servant. Consequently, it is frequently part of the agreement with servants that shoe soles are to be supplied by their employers.

Courtship is a sort of co-partnership.

THREE ROADS TO TAP OIL, COAL

[By Associated Press]
BILLINGS, Mont., March 19.—An area in southeastern Montana, approximately 150 miles wide and 170 miles long, one of the largest in the United States without a railroad, has prospects of three lines, which will tap both oil and coal fields.

A branch line, which will extend 35 miles south from Forsyth, Mont., to the headwaters of Arnelles creek, has been surveyed by the Northern Pacific railroad, and announcement has been made that construction will begin as soon as materials can be put on the ground. This line will open the coal fields in Rosebud county.

The Chicago, Burlington & Quincy, it is reported, is buying right of way for a line which will run eastward from some point on its tracks between Billings, Mont., and Sheridan, Wyo., into the two counties in the southeastern corner of Montana and into South Dakota.

The third line is backed by oil men headed by Charles M. Haskell, president of the Middle States Oil company, and former governor of Oklahoma. It has run surveys for a route from Miles City, Mont., past Sheridan, Wyo., to Casper, Wyo., oil fields northeast of Casper.

NEO-CHESS IS SPEEDY

[By Associated Press]
SAN FRANCISCO, Calif., March 18.—A tournament to test a new idea in chess is under way at the Mechanics' Institute Chess club here. The inventor of the game, Hugo Legler, who for many years was in the United States weather service on Mt. Tumpalpa, calls his new chess game the "San Francisco Neo-Chess."

The innovation consists of substituting a piece called the chancellor for the queen's rook. This new piece combines the power of rook and knight. Also for the queen's knight a piece known as the archbishop is substituted. This piece has the power of the bishop and knight. In all other respects the game is played as in the orthodox manner.

The inventor states that he has given several years of study to "Neo-Chess," and points out that chess has acquired its present status by a gradual process of evolution. For instance, the queen was given its bi-functional power of rook and knight in the middle ages. Up until now it is the only piece endowed with such bi-functional power.

While the substitution of the chancellor and archbishop will destroy the advance of the old game, experts declare, it leads to a speedy joining of forces and quick action. It is also pointed out that present day chess suffers from the inherent weakness that even two knights and king are unable to effect mate. In "Neo-Chess" an archbishop and king can mate easily. Those engaged in the tourney to test the new game, are: A. J. Fink, state chess champion; E. W. Gruer, Bernardo Smith and E. J. Clarke, chess players of the San Francisco Chronicle.

PIONEER BURIED BY BOY SCOUTS

[By Associated Press]
BUTTE, Mont., March 19.—Boy Scouts of Butte gave burial to John Kern, one of the founders and the last resident of Highland City, once a prosperous placer camp in the hills ten miles south of here.

The aged prospector was found dead in his cabin, with his dog watching his body. It took a rescue party twenty hours to get the body through the snow to Butte.

When it was announced that no relatives of the old miner could be found, that he had no visible estate and that he would be buried at county expense, the Boy Scouts took hold of the situation. The summer camp of the Butte troops had been near Kern's cabin and from him they had learned word lore. Contributions from the boys raised the money for a coffin and a burial tract, and eight boy scouts were pallbearers.

Investigating committees have no terrors for honest men.

THE EPISTLE OF JUDE GLORY OF THE DISCUSSED BY THE MEN'S CLASS CHRISTIAN RELIGION

The following is in part the discourse of Rev. Keith Brooks at the City Hall Bible Class:

The epistle of Jude is a sort of preface to the book of Revelation. The body of Christian truth is committed to the church in the epistles and apostasy for the last days is foretold. Jude represents apostate Christianity manifested in the last days, and the closing book of the Bible takes up apostate Christianity judged. The most condemnatory language found in the New Testament is in this short epistle of Jude.

"Jude announces to the churches that certain men would creep in unawares. This is the power of God to overcome the forces of evil in the cracks. They would gain inch by inch. They would make their way insidiously and by false pretenses.

"Jude says these teachers will turn the grace of God into lasciviousness. The charge is not personal lasciviousness but degrading the grace of God.

"Jude says they are dreamers, but their magnificent dreams will fall to materialize. Jude says they will speak evil of those things which they know not. They will not hesitate to bring railing accusations against the writers of scripture or against Jesus Himself. Jude says these are sunken rocks in your love feasts. They are rocks below the level of the water; on which men make shipwreck. Jude says they feed themselves without fear in the church.

"Jude compares them to foaming, restless, breaking waves of the sea, that scatter wreckage upon the shore. There is no stability in their conclusions. They are shooting stars to whom is reserved the blackness of darkness forever. Finally, Jude says, they speak great swelling words. They boast their transcendent knowledge. They invent a psychology that no one can understand.

"This is the dark side of Jude's picture. Next Sunday we shall consider the bright side, wherein Jude shows us how we are to be delivered from these snares of the last days and kept true to the old book and the old faith, through which alone the soul may be brought to heaven."

PERSONAL QUEST IS THE THEME OF DR. HADDEN

Dr. Robert A. Hadden, who is conducting a series of evangelistic meetings at the Presbyterian church, preached Sunday morning on the subject, "The Personal Quest."

"This is the business every Christian should be engaged in," he said. "There was a boy born and reared in a Christian family, with good teachers. But always the personal element was wanting; and so it was that he was a man in business life for ever he found his way to God; and oh, the years that had been lost! Let us determine we will help another to God. There are reasons why:

"First, the peril of the soul. These days it is almost forgotten there is a peril. Think of the destiny of a lost soul! In a lake city four foreign-born men stood at the wharfage talking; a woman fell in, they were moved to help, but let her sink. How about us? Thousands sinking!

"Second, the preciousness of a soul. Ask—How much is this child worth? Christ gave us a ransom—'What shall it profit a man if he shall gain the whole world and lose his own soul?' A president of one of the big concerns is a man who holds such value of souls. At a banquet he found the point of contact with a merchant prince; they slipped quietly out of sight a little while and settled that man's eternal salvation. A richly dressed lovely girl pulled off her glove and with it her betrothal diamond, which dropped into a gutter full of dirty storm water. Down she went and plunged in the dainty arms, regardless of all be-holders, and searched till she found her treasure. Down in life souls are lost like this.

"Third, the possibilities of a soul. When Jesus had chosen Andrew, he went out and brought Peter. We know of nothing else that he did, but Peter was a great endless thing. Jesus met that woman at the well of Samaria and she brought the whole town. Philip was hidden to leave his preaching and go down in the desert, where he met the Ethiopian eunuch; and tradition says that man did a great work. You never know what is going to unfold in a soul. That man that led the poor lad, D. L. Moody, how much might have been lost!

"What is necessary to do such work? Personal righteousness with God first, and with man; then a passion for souls. God give us a heart! You don't need auxiliaries, but passion for souls."

Rev. Henry O. Krings occupied the pulpit of the Redeemer Evangelical Lutheran church Sunday and chose for his theme as taken from Romans 1, 16, "The Glory of Christian Religion, as seen in its incontestable authority, and also in its saving power."

The speaker said: "There is but one religion, which is a real religion, and that is the Christian religion. The Christian religion is as far superior to every other religion as Heaven is superior to hell. Let us consider this truth at some length. Here in our text, Saint Paul, the great apostle declares, am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first and also to the Greek." In this declaration St. Paul mentions the two things which stamp the Christian religion as the only true religion. In the first place, he speaks of it as the Gospel of Christ, that is to say, a Gospel which St. Paul did not receive of man, and which he received of Jesus Christ Himself, Galatians 1, 12. This Gospel, this religion, is not one which men have invented, nor is it proclaimed upon the authority of the best scholars; neither is it a religion which the wisest men have discovered after long study and research, much less is it the product of a fanatic's dream or the result of a fool's meditations. It is nothing less than a religion taught by God Himself. The Christian religion therefore is of incontestable authority because it is the revelation of God Himself brought to us by no one else than Christ, the only begotten Son of the Almighty. He has proclaimed the real Gospel, namely to repent of our sins and to believe in Christ as our Savior and Redeemer. All other religions are the inventions of men, who have been misled by their own imaginations to quiet their guilty conscience and slavish dread of an unknown God. When Paul happened to be in Athens, he beheld the slavish devotion of the superstitious Greeks. He found there an altar bearing the inscription, 'To the Unknown God.' He said to himself, 'This God, whom ye ignorantly worship, I declare unto you.' When Paul came to the Romans, he told them that he was not ashamed of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. Therefore, announcing his coming to them at the same time he told the Romans what they might expect of him, when he would come, that he would unflinchingly and unreservedly preach the Gospel of Christ. He promised to bring the Romans something of which he was and never need be ashamed.

"In our text St. Paul makes no mention of the fine arts, the great learning and the brilliant eloquence which would bring to Rome from the highly cultured Greece. In his youth Paul sat at the feet of the famous Gamaliel as one of his most zealous and gifted pupils. He was one of the most thoroughly educated men of his day and an eloquent speaker. Could he not have been a brilliant career in Rome, the metropolis of the world? Might not his eloquence have brought him honor and fame had he used it to flatter the great and the powerful? Paul desired no honor and fame in this world. Paul took no pride in his learning, he gloried alone in the Gospel of Christ.

"Why was Paul not ashamed of the Gospel of the crucified Christ? Why did he so patiently bear the mockery and the persecutions of the ungodly? Why did he continue to preach the word of the Cross until he was decapitated at the command of Nero? Why did he stand before the mocking and the persecutions of the mighty King Agrippa and defend his convictions? Because it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth, to the Jew and the Gentile. The simple message of the Gospel is the divine power, which saves from sin, death and condemnation and brings one eternal bliss and the communion with God. The mighty Romans, lords of the world politically, were slaves spiritually, captives of Satan, bound in the fetters of sin and knowing not the way to salvation. For what did Paul preach unto the Romans? He proclaimed justification through faith in Christ crucified and for forgiveness of sins. Him, Christ alone has power to forgive sins, as He said unto that palsy-stricken man: 'Son, be of good cheer, thy sins are forgiven thee.'

"It is true, thousands of years of testing substantiate and verify the statement. The Gospel of Christ is a power unto salvation, to every one that believeth, be he a Jew or Gentile."

NAZARENE CHURCH IS CROWDED WITH WORSHIPERS
Sunday proved to be a red letter day at the church of the Nazarene on South Glendale avenue. The Sunday school and preaching service had the largest attendance since the organization of the church in Glendale. Rev. Swaney preached at the afternoon service and Mr. and Mrs. Hull of Pasadena, rendered special music at this service. At night Rev. Charles J. Penn, a Nazarene evangelist, who lives in Los Angeles, preached the sermon, using as his text Amos 5:7 and Romans 8:16. Rev. Penn's sermon was enjoyed by the large congregation that was present. The meetings for the week are as follows: Tuesday evening, prayer meeting at the church. Friday evening, prayer meeting at the home of C. Taylor, 1236 East Colorado. The people of Glendale are urged to avail themselves of the opportunity to attend the services.

CREATIVE THOUGHT, HI JUNIORS HAVE DISCUSSED BY DR. FAREED
That thought—creative thought—is the magic wand by which one's life or the whole world may be changed, was well exemplified Sunday morning by Dr. Fareed in his second lecture on "Creative Thought" in the Masonic temple.

In world history there has always been a keynote which the tendency of the times has struck. The age-long rule of wealth and power made kings and serfs, but as light began to dawn through erudition, men learning was extended to the masses, the rule of power received its death knell. Now the aristocracy of ideas is receiving much attention, and never before has an idea become so much the symbol of greatness as at the present time.

The ability to create original ideas has been greatly hampered because freedom of thought has been so restricted in many countries, but finding one's center—the Higher Self—will loosen the fetters and break the bondage, thus giving free expression to the soul through the birth of new ideas along any line of work.

Start with the God thought, the creative idea, for the vision of our dreams begins of its own kind, and visualization must precede all material manifestation. Man is heir to the great riches of creative thought to the extent that he is able to manifest that power and bring forth his heritage. Every thought begins in the invisible realm of thought. Look around and see how an idea may be supplied with something to quiet his guilty conscience and slavish dread of an unknown God. When Paul happened to be in Athens, he beheld the slavish devotion of the superstitious Greeks. He found there an altar bearing the inscription, 'To the Unknown God.' He said to himself, 'This God, whom ye ignorantly worship, I declare unto you.' When Paul came to the Romans, he told them that he was not ashamed of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. The age-long rule of wealth and power made kings and serfs, but as light began to dawn through erudition, men learning was extended to the masses, the rule of power received its death knell. Now the aristocracy of ideas is receiving much attention, and never before has an idea become so much the symbol of greatness as at the present time.

The ability to create original ideas has been greatly hampered because freedom of thought has been so restricted in many countries, but finding one's center—the Higher Self—will loosen the fetters and break the bondage, thus giving free expression to the soul through the birth of new ideas along any line of work.

Start with the God thought, the creative idea, for the vision of our dreams begins of its own kind, and visualization must precede all material manifestation. Man is heir to the great riches of creative thought to the extent that he is able to manifest that power and bring forth his heritage. Every thought begins in the invisible realm of thought. Look around and see how an idea may be supplied with something to quiet his guilty conscience and slavish dread of an unknown God. When Paul happened to be in Athens, he beheld the slavish devotion of the superstitious Greeks. He found there an altar bearing the inscription, 'To the Unknown God.' He said to himself, 'This God, whom ye ignorantly worship, I declare unto you.' When Paul came to the Romans, he told them that he was not ashamed of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. Therefore, announcing his coming to them at the same time he told the Romans what they might expect of him, when he would come, that he would unflinchingly and unreservedly preach the Gospel of Christ. He promised to bring the Romans something of which he was and never need be ashamed.

"In our text St. Paul makes no mention of the fine arts, the great learning and the brilliant eloquence which would bring to Rome from the highly cultured Greece. In his youth Paul sat at the feet of the famous Gamaliel as one of his most zealous and gifted pupils. He was one of the most thoroughly educated men of his day and an eloquent speaker. Could he not have been a brilliant career in Rome, the metropolis of the world? Might not his eloquence have brought him honor and fame had he used it to flatter the great and the powerful? Paul desired no honor and fame in this world. Paul took no pride in his learning, he gloried alone in the Gospel of Christ.

"Why was Paul not ashamed of the Gospel of the crucified Christ? Why did he so patiently bear the mockery and the persecutions of the ungodly? Why did he continue to preach the word of the Cross until he was decapitated at the command of Nero? Why did he stand before the mocking and the persecutions of the mighty King Agrippa and defend his convictions? Because it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth, to the Jew and the Gentile. The simple message of the Gospel is the divine power, which saves from sin, death and condemnation and brings one eternal bliss and the communion with God. The mighty Romans, lords of the world politically, were slaves spiritually, captives of Satan, bound in the fetters of sin and knowing not the way to salvation. For what did Paul preach unto the Romans? He proclaimed justification through faith in Christ crucified and for forgiveness of sins. Him, Christ alone has power to forgive sins, as He said unto that palsy-stricken man: 'Son, be of good cheer, thy sins are forgiven thee.'

"It is true, thousands of years of testing substantiate and verify the statement. The Gospel of Christ is a power unto salvation, to every one that believeth, be he a Jew or Gentile."

That thought—creative thought—is the magic wand by which one's life or the whole world may be changed, was well exemplified Sunday morning by Dr. Fareed in his second lecture on "Creative Thought" in the Masonic temple.

In world history there has always been a keynote which the tendency of the times has struck. The age-long rule of wealth and power made kings and serfs, but as light began to dawn through erudition, men learning was extended to the masses, the rule of power received its death knell. TREND OF FASHION
BY HELEN MERRILL EMERY

That the two-piece suit has not been entirely supplanted by the popular three-piece type is conclusively established by the rather surprisingly large number of two-piece models displayed in the spring fashions.

In the two-piece suits which have made their appearance the length of the jackets vary. Some are of the bolero type which discloses several inches of the blouse, others reach just to the hips and are straight in line or have a slight circular flare. Although not so new the Balkan blouse tied at one side and fitted rather tightly about the hips is still decidedly popular. The blouse of putty color crepe has embroidered motifs done in bright colored silks.

A politician who was making a house-to-house canvass during a recent election came to a farm house, when he observed a young woman standing at the gate. The candidate politely lifted his hat and asked:

"No doubt, my dear madam, your husband is at home?"

"Yes," responded the woman. "Might I have the pleasure of seeing him?" inquired the politician.

"He's down in the pasture burying the dog," was the reply from the individual at the gate.

"He wore himself out a barking at the candidates," said the woman.

The girl had lifted her sweet heart; and he said as he slipped the ring she had returned to him into his waistcoat pocket.

"Who has supplanted me?"

"I don't like to tell you," she answered.

"Yes, tell me!" he insisted. "Give me his name and address."

"No, Harold, No!" said the girl. "You want to kill him."

"No, J. don't," said Harold. "I only want to sell him this ring."

SOCIETY NEWS OF WASHINGTON

What California Representatives Are Doing in Capital

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE

WASHINGTON, March 19.—The "convalescents" special, as Washington renamed the President's going-away train, managed to get away with most of the vacation party aboard. Mrs. Harding, leaving the White House for the first time in six months, was in high spirits, but Attorney General Daugherty made the first part of the journey in bed, and Speaker Gillett was too ill to go with the others. The President was so tired that he would make no definite plans other than for "thirty miles or so of drifting down stream alternating with thirty-six holes of golf."

Nevertheless, making plans for the Presidential party is still the favorite indoor sport here. One hears that after the visit to the McLeans on the "Pioneer" is over, they will go down through the canal and up the west coast and ultimately on to Alaska with the big provision "if Mrs. Harding is well enough." However, Mrs. Harding said, just before she left, that she and the President would return to Washington in April, and that if she stood this trip well, they hoped to make the Alaska trip they had planned for last year. The President has very definitely planned to make a cross-country trip, reaching Los Angeles for the elaborate celebration of the Centenary of the Monroe Doctrine which will take place there. And if he makes the Alaska trip he will manage to see, both going and coming, a great deal of the golden west.

The Vice-President and Mrs. Coolidge have gone to Hot Springs for a short holiday—about ten days of it—and after that the Vice-President has a speaking engagement at Lynchburg before they are off for their home in Northampton, Mass.

An inquisitive reporter prodding Secretary Hughes this last week on his summer plans, is said to have elicited this: "I have no thought of summer, nor even of spring. I have not even heard of bird twitter, and my desk is piled high with work." The secretary of the town grinning appreciatively for it suggested the whole flock of malicious little birds that have been saying that the secretary is kept from his proposed Chilean trip not so much by the fact that various new European nations are making faces at one another over their back fences, as that every foreigner entering Chile must be vaccinated unless he can prove it has been done within a year. The ladies who have planned to go with the mission do not seem to be withdrawing because of the restriction. Among them is Mrs. William Eric Fowler, who was Mrs. Edwin Earl of California, widow of the big fruit magnate, until her remarriage.

Secretary Denby is off to Panama on the "Henderson," an official inspection trip during which he will go on through to the Pacific to witness the spring manoeuvres of the Atlantic and Pacific fleets. The party on the "Henderson" is a stag party. The congressmen who wanted to take their wives along sailed from New York on the "Cristobal" about twenty-four hours earlier and picked up the "Henderson" off Norfolk. When the wives of the group going on the "Henderson" were bidding their husbands a tearful but philosophic farewell on the pier, they were electrified to observe three pretty and well-dressed girls going aboard. Of course they immediately asked, "How come?" and after a little were soothed by the explanation that the girls were nurses who went with the ship, for it really was a stag party.

Two of the California congressional delegation are making the Panama trip—Representative Walter F. Lineberger of Long Beach and Representative James Henry MacLafferty of Oakland. Mr. Lineberger will go on to his home in California after the fleet manoeuvres, where he will keep in touch with his district for the next six or eight months and renew acquaintance with Mrs. Lineberger and the children. They did not come with him to Washington this time, as in previous sessions, for it did not seem worthwhile to interrupt the children's schooling for three months. Extra responsibility descended on Mr. Lineberger this winter when his colleague, Representative Henry Z. Osborne of the adjoining tenth district died in January. Mr. Osborne was the last man in the House who saw service in the Union armies during the Civil War.

When Secretary Weeks takes his Alaska trip in April Mr. and Mrs. MacLafferty will be in the party, and after that they are planning to go to Hawaii and the Philippines. Mr. MacLafferty is much interested in persuading the powers that be to make Alameda a naval base.

Representative Mae E. Nolan will remain in Washington as will Representative Clarence F. Lea of Santa Rosa and Representative Arthur M. Free of San Jose for the present. The five Free children will be in school here till summer. Representative Philip David Swing of El Centro is, with Mrs. Swing, conducting a party to view the Imperial Valley irrigation project. There are twenty-two Congressmen with them, including "most of their wives," as an enthusiastic clerk ambiguously put it. In the party are Representatives Henry Ellsworth Barbour of Fresno and John E. Baker of Alturas.

Senator and Mrs. Johnson have sailed, and will join forces with Senator Moses of New Hampshire in London. Washington was greatly amused on the eve of their departure to be flooded with an appeal from one Marcus W. Robbins of San Diego for a chain letter campaign, like the old-fashioned prayer letters, for William E. Borah of Idaho as republican standard-bearer in 1924. They say that Mrs. Johnson is anything but amused at the idea.

EASTER COMMUNICATION

"One touch of nature makes all the world akin," sang the poet. And in making that declaration he set the world guessing as to his meaning.

And, I suppose, the world will go on wondering just what act in nature the poet referred to. I have often been tempted to imagine that the famous writer had his mind centered upon Easter, for certainly it is that Easter, with its festivals and ceremonies appealing to the entire Christian world which certainly brings us all to the altar of remembrance, regardless of the locality in which we live.

There is something else in Easter. The day indicates that the fetters of winter have melted away. For it comes when all nature is awakening from the winter's sleep to new life.

Easter, the Queen of Festivals, as it is well called, will soon be here. The sombre shades of Lent will have given place to the glorious brightness of the Resurrection morn.

Let patriotism have its days and freedom its monuments, and let the triumphs of navigators and generals be annually observed; but surely, beyond all these a season that stands for as much to the whole world as Easter may well

AGRICULTURAL BUDGET RESTORED

Almost Entire $490,000 Cut Is Returned to the Work

Following a conference of the agricultural legislative committee with the administration of Governor Friend W. Richardson, R. N. Wilson, secretary of the committee, has announced that nearly all the $490,000 stricken from the agricultural budget has been restored, and that no function of the state dealing with agriculture, will be seriously hampered.

Home demonstration work, which had been eliminated from the appropriation for the University of California, to be transferred to the high school districts of the state, will be left with the university while the $57,000 needed for its maintenance will have to be cared for by the money already given the institution in the budget; this action has been assured.

The adjustments regarding the budget of the state department of agriculture include the agreement that the self-supporting functions, which had been reduced by $212,000, will be continued, probably through a efficiency appropriation, as the interpretation placed upon the law regarding them, prevents direct appropriations being made. The plant quarantine item is to be restored to the budget, with but a slight reduction. Funds for grain and warehouse inspection, totaling $24,285 and pest control as regards ovum fumigation in the sum of $8,760, also have been definitely promised. Assurances also have been given that in the event the plan of the governor to transfer the livestock sanitary service from the state to the counties, is defeated in the legislature, he will provide for its continuance as a state function. It is not considered probable the bill providing for the change can be passed, and in the event of its defeat, the $118,000 needed for its support will be restored to the agricultural budget.

These adjustments were reached after representatives of the agricultural legislative committee, which is composed of thirty-five commodity organizations in the state, met in Sacramento to consider the bill. With them met representatives of the California Farm Bureau Federation, the California State Grange and the Farmers' Educational and Co-operative Union. A special committee was named to take the case to the governor's agricultural advisory council, and its efforts met with such success that Mr. Wilson has stated that the bill will be passed.

"The net result is that all of the vital functions of the department of agriculture will be well cared for, a condition upon which the farmers of the state may well congratulate themselves."

The agricultural legislative committee endorsed the bills providing for a tax upon commercial motor carriers operating upon the highways, to provide for highway maintenance, and for a gasoline tax of 2c. The breed motor vehicle bill also was approved. The committee went on record, however, against the proposed consolidation of the divisions of markets, standardization, and weights and measures, in the department of agriculture.

be remembered each year with songs and flowers, and with every mark of gratitude of loftiest jubilation.

On this day the multitudes forget for a time all cares, all losses, all grievances, in the consciousness of exalted fellowship with the triumphant Christ and in the glamorous expectation of endless personal felicity.

It may be there are few Easters left for many of us. Many will not be permitted to tell another year the glorious news of the Resurrection, nor to enjoy its blessings.

So while we can let us love and live and work for Him and be thankful for each other. Our lives cannot be triumphant unless kindness, love and truth are triumphant.

For these He stood, for these He lived and for these He died, and by the powers of these He rose again, to let all join the exelling chorus on Easter Day.

Christ is risen, Christ is risen! Love's redeeming work is done. He fought the fight; the victory is won; Jesus' agony is over; darkness veils the earth no more. Christ is risen, Christ is risen.

(The above was written by Mrs. Albert Ott of Murray, Idaho, who is visiting her daughter, Mrs. L. F. Groesbeck, 443 W. Colorado.)

FIRST MODERN WAREHOUSE IN THE WEST TO BE BUILT BY LOS ANGELES GROCER

A five-acre tract at Vermont and Alameda streets has been chosen by the Sam Seelig company as the site for their new half-million dollar warehouse. Work will be commenced during first week in April.

The Seelig company operates 125 stores in suburban communities near Los Angeles and in the metropolitan district of the big city. These stores serve upwards of 275,000 customers every week. Each month 1,250,000 customers are served. This means that if every person in Los Angeles county made one purchase a month in a Seelig store, they would not buy more than is now being purchased by the 275,000 regular customers of the company.

This year the asparagus sold by the company will require the production from 100 acres of California's fertile land. The number of acres required for Lankershim peaches, Santa Clara prunes and other well known California products, runs the farm acreage into a huge total, which is required to produce the products the Seelig company sells every year.

Each week 45 carloads, a solid trainload of food, leaves the warehouse on the fleet of 24 trucks. This is delivered promptly to all stores in this section. Up-to-date delivery and warehousing facilities will make it possible for the Seelig company to keep their store stocks fresh, clean and satisfactory.

The company employs 450 people in its stores, and a host of workers are required to build and prepare the new markets to be opened this year all over Southern California.

Wing Grove Lots Bought by Realtor

Five lots in the Wing Grove tract have been sold by Charles Kausen, well known realtor of 1110 East Broadway. So well does Mr. Kausen think of that property that he purchased one of the lots for himself.

During the past few weeks Mr. Kausen has sold the following properties: An apartment house, 1241 West Second street, Los Angeles, to Miss Nellie Hocke, the price paid for the property was $15,000; a 2-story brick business block located at the corner of Avenue 64 and Pasadena for the Leigh Investment company, the price paid being $20,000.

He also sold a 25-acre ranch at Etiwanda for $20,000 to Mr. Gibbs, who will occupy the property, and for Mr. Gibbs he sold six lots on Pennsylvania avenue, Los Angeles, to Dr. C. W. Taylor for $4,000.

Virtue is its own reward, but some people seem to think that it requires a lot of advertising.

JAPAN ART AND TEA COMPANY SHIPS TO ENGLAND

The Japan Art & Tea company, 135 South Brand, is making a shipment of goods to England today, which was ordered by a lady who recently lived in Glendale, and who was a patron of this store. "This is one of the evidences of how we treat people when they trade with us," said the proprietor while he was busily engaged in making up the shipment.

The Japan Art & Tea Store has recently added several lines of goods to its already large stock, among them being a complete stock of Jevne's high-grade groceries and products. In the Japan Art & Tea Store Glendale has an Oriental store that is second to none in this section. The business is growing right along, and the store bids fair to become one of the big concerns of the Pacific coast in this particular line of merchandising.

Some wives could save more money if their husbands would give them more to save.

NO CHANCE FOR ROOKIES IN NEW YORK

By HENRY L. FARRELL
(United Press Sports Editor)

NEW YORK, March 19.—When young Johnny Mitchell was with the New York Yankees they used to say he had the easiest job in baseball.

He was substituting for Deacon Scott, the star shortstop of the club and the Deacon has been on the job every day in more than 1000 games. It was an easy job to earn money, but it was a tough assignment to get any place and Mitchell finally had to be traded to the Boston Red Sox to get a chance.

For two years he sat on the bench and two years are a lot to lose.

Every rookie in the country wants to get on one of the New York clubs and no rookie in the country has a chance when they do land with the Giants or the Yanks.

Miller Huggins, manager of the Yanks, has a characteristic aversion to young players. His notions about ball players can be gathered from the fact that he paid Frank Baker $10.00 for sitting on the bench last season and he wants him back again this season.

While John McGraw has turned lately to grabbing his stars in the "ready to wear" market, he has developed a lot of young ball players and it may be that prosperity and success are reducing the thrills and the ambition for any fame that he could get out of making youngsters.

The Giants at present are almost an all-star team. With the exception of the pitching staff there isn't a vacancy on the club for a youngster to shoot at.

Some Cobb the second, another Frisch or Eddie Collins might come along and get a place on the regular nine, but they come once in twenty years and they would have to come awfully strong to crowd out any of the boys that are now working for Napoleon.

The Giants have two of the nicest looking young players in the country on their payroll now—Freddie Maguire and Waddy McPhee. Maguire is a picture of Edie Collins in face and form. McPhee is a young Princeton star and also an excellent prospect.

McGraw has always had the reputation of being willing to consider a few things from the ball players' point of view when it came to an argument between player and club.

The Giant boss proved this in a manner that probably was a terrible jolt to many club owners when he gave his opinion that Jack Bentley and other high priced ball players ought to get a part of the purchase price.

However, being as Mr. McGraw is always on the purchasing end of big moneyed deals, perhaps his view is not as magnanimous and as generous as it sounds.

Tris speaker worked a little psychology effectually last year when he selected Guy Morton to pitch the opening game for the Cleveland Indians. Morton had nearly everything but confidence and that little stunt did more than anything else could to make him believe in himself.

The same stunt was worked by McGraw at the San Antonio training camp of the Giants. Jimmy O'Connell, a $75,000 rookie from San Antonio had just reported and he was a little shy and nervous.

"Just take your time, young fellow, and don't get excited. You are the centerfielder of this ball club," McGraw said.

PARASOL ENTERS SOCIETY GARB THIS YEAR

By HEDDA HOYT

Fashion Editor of the United Press
(Written for the United Press)

NEW YORK, N. Y., March 19. (United Press).—The parasol will assume an important role in the summer fashion festival. For the past few years women have braved the sun's rays in hopes of getting a fashionable sunburn, but they have found that the skin once burnt becomes coarse and ugly and requires months of bleaching before it regains its original texture and whiteness.

Palm Beach fashions predict the modes for spring, and summer at the northern resorts and Palm Beach decrees the parasol.

What a galaxy of parasols there are to choose from this year—from fluffy buffed taffetas to cretonnes and printed cottons—parasols of every shape, shade and material and for every conceivable occasion.

There are the many spoked shapes covered with pongee silks which come in pastel shades such as mountain haze, pink, lemon and orchid. Often these are monogrammed near the edge in silk of a shade darker than the parasol.

Batiked Parasols

Square or oblong parasols of batik silk fitted tightly over the frames without gathers are very popular since the batik craze is on. These are prettier in black and white than they are in the more extravagant tones.

Among the printed affects are the cretonnes and India prints for beach use. While these are inexpensive they are very effective. Then, there are the flowered taffetas in pretty soft colors and handpainted taffetas, which are just as popular for beach use and are more dressy.

Often parasols have tops of one color and linings of another. A French import of navy blue taffeta embroidered in medallions in red and gold has a lining of red China silk. Tiny gold braid outlines the border of the parasol corresponding with the gold used in the medallions which are placed between each spoke. Red tips add another touch that is new.

The many ruffled taffeta parasols in dome-shapes are lovely with the summer frock. While these are somewhat costly in the shops one can purchase a plain taffeta parasol and an additional yard or so of taffeta of the same shade and make one very easily.

Make your Own

Cut the material in strips four inches wide, fray one edge about half an inch and gather the other and sew by hand with tiny stitches to the parasol starting at the small end. The frayed edge makes a pretty fluffy finish for the ruffle. Then, too, overlap one ruffle over the other so that the stitches do not show and finish about the point with a shirred puff of taffeta. Five ruffles should be ample.

The present craze for gingham bathing suits brings the vogue for the gingham parasol, which is decidedly youthful and flattering.

Wooden handles are used on most of the parasols this season and often they have bunches of carved fruit painted in natural colors. Among the novelty handles are the French doll heads of wood, painted in colors and with hair of yellow wool. Carved dog heads are popular handles on parasols for sports wear.

Paint Your Own

Recently I stopped in an art shop and saw girls painting parasol handles in brilliant colors and sewing braids of different shades about the borders of parasols. A parasol of navy blue had a brilliant red

MUSKRATS MAKE GOOD GRUBSTAKE

[By Associated Press]

ANCHORAGE, Alaska, March 19.—Bogs and small lakes, the haunts of the prospector in traveling Alaska in summer, are proving boon to many men who depend upon a trap line for a grubstake winter. These regions are now being converted into muskrat farms. One man, near Wasilla, has more than ninety houses in a swamplake, where he placed some last year. At the rate of increase the muskrat industry promises to become a big thing. Muskrat skins usually sow a small plot of carrots and other vegetables, as soon as the rats discover that is plenty of food they flock to feeding place.

SAN FRANCISCO PRIZE TALKER

[By Associated Press]

SAN FRANCISCO, Calif., March 19.—San Francisco does more telephone talking than any other city of its size in the world, according to officials of the Pacific Telephone and Telegraph company, here. There are 174,000 phones in this city of approximately 700,000 population, or a per capita of one telephone to every four persons. Exclusively of long distance, more than 1,000,000 calls a day are completed in the city. New York has only one telephone to every fifteen persons, it is said.

The largest underground terminal rack in the world is on Bush street, here, for the Douglas, Kearny and Sutter exchanges. Altogether there are 18 exchanges in the city. In one of these, the Chinatown exchange, the switchboard is operated entirely by Chinese girls and the Orientals

Truths in Epigram

An idler is a watch that wants both hands; as useless if it goes as if it stands.—Cowper.

If we have not quiet in our own minds, outward comforts will do no more for us than a golden slipper on a gouty foot.—Bunyan.

A rib of Shakespeare would have sufficed to produce a Milton, and a Milton all the poets that have succeeded him.—Landor.

INTERNATIONAL GOSSIPS

European correspondents are responsible for much. Doubtless many of them are doing the best they can. They send news that has value because it is the truth. Others send as news that which is not the truth, and therefore lacks value. Possibly the distinction as between the two classes of correspondents is difficult to draw. Hence the unreliable ones cast a shadow upon the integrity of the entire service. Perhaps a good way to judge the quality of a correspondent would be by the paper that presents his information. If this information appears in papers known to be given over to propaganda of various sorts; to be prejudiced against England or France, or to be favorable to Germany and the soviets, the really thoughtful reader knows how to classify the correspondent. He is given a place in the mental rogues' gallery.

Such a correspondent lately has been sending out word that a combination including France, Germany, Russia and Japan is to be the outcome of the present situation. The rest of the world is warned that it must look out then. Yes indeed.

France now maintains a force in Germany for the purpose of collecting a debt that Germany has sought to evade. Financiers of the highest repute say that the debtor is competent to pay. Its reluctance to pay in any part, does not make for friendship with the creditor. Neither is the presence of armed forces doing much to promote amity, or to set up intimate relations.

Russia and Japan are at loggerheads. Just at present a Japanese ship has been ordered to seal its radio, or get out of Russian waters. The penalty for disobedience is officially stated to be the discomfort of being blown up. This incident does not seem to argue that fraternal bonds are beginning to draw Russia and Japan together.

Russian sovietism is a poison to government. The only nation that could afford to ally itself with Russia would be one great enough to dominate it utterly. If Germany were able to do this, to use the Russians to do its fighting and yield docilely to its rule, it might be in a mood to make the essay. In circumstances as they exist, such coalition would be German suicide. Germany would be stifled in the poison swamp of bolshevism.

There are indications that Germany is getting ready to accede to terms, and that France is in a mood to listen to a reasonable proposal. This does not mean that after that the two intend to stand shoulder to shoulder against most of the world. It means that each will be left free to attend to industrial interests and the activities of peace. There is great promise for Europe and the world in this possibility.

Meanwhile, the correspondent who thinks to stuff his nonsense down the throats of intelligent people in this country, is proving himself a silly fellow.

FUTURE JURIES

Indications are strong that the plan of having three-fourths of a jury frame the verdict will be incorporated into law with the utmost speed. Seldom has a proposed measure received such wide and immediate endorsement. Commendations come from bench and bar as well as from many civic organizations and countless individuals.

Impatience over the delays in criminal cases, the delays often the cause of defeating justice in the end, has been manifest for a long time. One pernicious form of delay was in the tricks by which criminal lawyers have caused disagreements. Following one failure, there would be other trials, each at great expense, and finally the defendant, possibly known to be guilty, would be turned loose. The fact that a single recalcitrant, stupid or corrupt juror could defy the judgment of the eleven, made very precarious the task of convicting even the most brazen offender.

In many recent cases evincing in mistrial after two or three efforts to establish the truth, prisoners have been released, the state recognizing the impossibility of convicting, and yet certain that conviction had been deserved. In several of these instances all but two or three jurors had voted in favor of a verdict of guilt.

The courts have difficulty in dealing with the criminal cases, so great is the number of these. The difficulty is multiplied now by the ease with which a procedure that should be final, is permitted to be the initial trial of a long, and often futile series of trials. The general belief is that the three-fourths rule would be a remedy for this evil.

BEGINNING YOUNG

Many of the bandits, yeggs, thieves, or malefactors of whatever kind engaged in swelling the wave of crime, are surprisingly young. Four charged with attempting to hold up a postoffice of the foothills region range in age from sixteen to the maturity of twenty-three. If their brains are not addled by dope, or if they are not singularly depraved, they will be glad to have been caught. It is possible now that as first offenders they may receive probation, thus escaping the stigma and the moral miasma of the prison. Then if there is good in them they will have a chance even yet for useful citizenship and decent careers. Here and there, however, is to be found the individual set in determination to follow evil courses, and apparently not amenable to reform measures, kind or harsh.

In many instances, even among the young, drugs are found to be the inspiration of crime. The chances are that some of the four mentioned will prove to be addicts. The habit spreads secretly but at dreadful speed. The desire for the drug urges the addict to crime, and the drug itself lends the spurious and reckless courage that makes him a menace, as willing to slay as to steal.

DAMAGE BY FIRE

Estimates regarding the extent of damage done by the great forest fire that for a time threatened the Mt. Lowe observatory cannot well be figured in terms of money. It was a great loss, well-nigh irreparable. It left in delightful canyons, and high on stately peaks, scars that only the passage of many years may efface. It turned to flaming torches the great trees overhanging familiar trails, and of these there is naught out blackened stumps, the ashes of the growths having been tossed afar by the winds. The efficacy of the region as a watershed was lessened, but in what degree must remain a question. The greatest loss in any case was the extinguishing of beauty.

No set price may be named for a charming vista that lures the beholder into its depths. There is no tag on the oak that bends above a crystal stream singing over the rocks of an arroyo. The shadow it casts for the comfort of the traveler is an invaluable benison. The picture of which it forms a part haunts the memory. And for that picture to have vanished gives a sense of loss not to be expressed in figures.

The arrest of two Chinese charged with embezzlement of funds belonging to their employer probably is the first on record in California courts. The honesty of the Chinese in a business deal is proverbial, and their high sense of honor is such that they prefer death to default on a financial obligation.

Recently a moving picture portrayed a prison scene, with the doors just closing on a breaker of the law. At the spectacle a man in the theater cried out in fear. A little later he had been arrested for forgery and assault. Showing that conscience is a hard thing to get away from.

Women and the Sporting Spirit

By ESTELLE LAWTON LINDSEY

A man of my acquaintance once became mortally offended because an old friend of his wife spoke of her as "a good sport." All he meant was that she could give and take, bore no malice when defeated and could cheer a victorious antagonist if the game had been square.

Her husband had never thought it necessary for a woman to develop what he regarded as a strictly masculine virtue. Still he had married his wife very largely because of this trait in her; but, being a man, he did not know it.

Now if I as a woman were asked what, more than any one thing, women need to improve themselves I should in truth be compelled to say the sporting spirit. Most women view life as too much of a personal affair; and, as long as this is true, they will be unable to take the large view that the issue is of more importance than the individual.

It's lack of sporting spirit that brings about the continuous conflicts between mother and daughter-in-law. The mother regards it as a personal humiliation that her daughter-in-law should come first in the affection of her son. The sporting spirit would see that it is good for the race that the wife should come before the mother for the wife is the guardian of the new race. The sporting spirit would show mothers that their own daughters had a right to be mistresses in their own houses as the mothers had been mistresses in theirs.

"To everything there is a season and a time to every purpose under heaven," and the time for mothers to run a house is when their daughters are growing up, not when they are married and in charge of the establishments of their own husbands.

But the sporting spirit can only be developed through team work and that to date is practically no part of the training of girls. Young women compete chiefly for the admiration of men. The competition is intensely personal and usually distinguished by bitterness, open or concealed. It is a rare woman who can congratulate her rival on her wedding day and omit from her features a sly smile. The sense of defeat is too personal and too close.

Women may vote and hold office, but they will never be all around humans until they acquire the sporting spirit and consider it a virtue.

THE RIGHT WORD

By W. CURTIS NICHOLSON

ARE A FAMILY "IT"?

(Find the error in this article)

Comes a letter from A. E. Layman, a teacher in the Harrison high school, Chicago. After ascertaining that "I have followed with interest and approval your comments in 'The Right Word'," he does not approve of using are (instead of is) in a sentence quoted as follows: "One per cent is not in debt." Some time ago "The Right Word" changed is to are.

Mr. Layman maintains that the sentence is similar to "Two dollars is too much."

There is nothing wrong with the sentence, "Two dollars is too much."

"The Right Word" respects the contention of Mr. Layman, but still maintains that while the distinction is fine are is the better word in the first sentence. One per cent is not in debt as a body; one per cent are considered individually.

The sentence is somewhat similar to an excerpt from Thomas R. Lounsbury: "There are no small number of verbs."

Next, Mr. Layman questions the use of were and them in "Charles" family were put in charge of a porter, who escorted them to the hotel. The correspondent prefers are and it.

"The Right Word" refuses to give up were and them, in the first place because of the absurdity of calling a family "it," and in the second place because the statement is to all intent and purposes the same as saying "They were escorted."

The Error.

"One per cent is not in debt." (A period should follow per cent. It has already been explained that is should be changed to are.)

A laconic reply is one characterized by a few words. A laconic reply is short and forceful. The word is pronounced la-kon' ik (a as in final; o as in not; i as in habit).

THE LISTENING POST

By James W. Foley

It is often said that a certain rich man, or rich men in general, ought to do a certain thing in the way of giving money "because it will never be missed."

That is a popular belief. The belief that rich men have merely to write checks for whatever sums they choose and the thing is done.

The benefaction is made.

The rich man is usually believed to be a person to whom money means nothing.

One who can give away this sum and that sum to this cause and that cause without knowing that the money is gone.

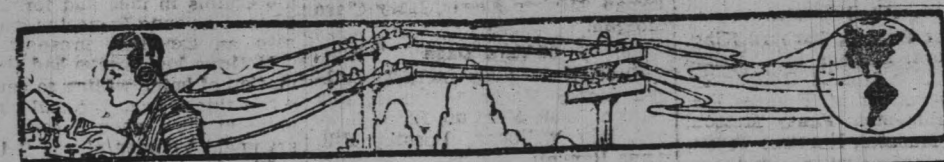

And in a certain sense this may be true. But the rich man is much like you and me. He prefers to choose his own benefactions. To give where he pleases. Not where it pleases us to have him give.

The error of the belief that rich men should give "because they will not miss it" is that such a course means not a benefaction at all. Because what you give that you do not miss is not a gift.

A gift is something that means something. Something that means self denial to some degree or other.

If a man had a mountain range of gold it would be no generous impulse that would him bid you go dig a scuffle full.

And it would mean nothing to him. And little to you. Because nothing of the spirit would be involved.

Songs of the Poets

Country and Home—By J. Montgomery

There is a land, of every land the pride, Beloved by Heaven o'er the world beside: Where brighter suns dispense serener light, And milder moons emparadise the night;— There is a spot of earth supremely blest, A dearer, sweeter spot than all the rest, Where man, creation's tyrant, casts aside

His sword and sceptre, pageantry and pride, While in his softened looks benignly blend The site, the son, the husband, brother, friend: "Where shall that land, that spot of earth, be found?" Art thou a man?—a patriot?—look around! O, thou shalt find, how'er thy footsteps roam, That land thy country, and that spot thy home!

COFFEE-ABUSED AND DEFENDED

By DR. FRANK CRANE

COFFEE has been roundly abused often and defended seldom, for the reason that it needs no argument to drink it and a good deal of persuasion to keep from drinking it.

There are some who claim that it is pure poison and should never be touched. This is an extreme view.

As far as the normal working of the human organism is concerned, coffee is not necessary. It is not a food. It is a stimulant, and any one would be just as well off if he never touched it. At the same time it doubtless does little harm to at least 97 per cent of the people who take it and it helps a little to alleviate the drabness of life.

It is probably the least injurious of stimulants. People who are hyper-sensitive to alkaloids, however, should let tea, coffee and cocoa alone, or be very temperate in their use of these beverages.

William H. Ukers, editor of the Tea and Coffee Trade Journal, has got out a big book that looks something like a report of the patent office or a cyclopedia. It is all about coffee.

For those who delight to get hold of a book that actually tells all anybody wants to know about a subject this book will be a find.

For instance, we come across in it such facts as follow:

Coffee is at least one thousand years old and may be as old as Tutankhamen. For nobody knows exactly when it was discovered. Vessels looking very much like modern coffee pots have been found in the tombs of Egypt.

It was in 900 A. D., however, according to Mr. Ukers, that coffee was first mentioned in literature. At first people ate coffee. The whole ripe berries, which were red and looked like cranberries, were crushed and moulded into food balls, held in shape with fat, and were used by the wandering tribes of Africa in their long marches.

The first coffee drunk was a kind of a wine made from the hulls of the berries. Indeed, the name coffee comes from the Arabian Qahwah, meaning wine.

Coffee was first drunk as a medicine. Its use as a beverage dates back at least 600 years.

Coffee, like tobacco, is used all over the world. It is a democratic beverage and is patronized equally by the common laborer and the guests at fashionable restaurants.

The coffee plant was first cultivated in Abyssinia, where it is indigenous, and spread thence throughout the world.

Paul Revere, who made the famous ride, was a silversmith who had made many beautiful coffee pots.

Coffee drinking in Arabia is a part of the ritual of business, as also in other oriental countries.

Since the adoption of the eighteenth amendment, the consumption of coffee in the United States has increased almost 20 per cent.

GOING FORWARDERS

(Toledo Blade)

One of those lecturers who have learned that Americans will gladly pay an admission fee to hear ill things about their country, says:

"We cannot go on indefinitely holding an observer's position in Europe. It is our duty to help Great Britain and France go forward together."

In the same newspaper which gives an account of this lecture is a dispatch from London over which has been placed the headline: "British Say France Fails to Appreciate Sacrifices."

Besides this cablegram is one from Paris, headed:

"Paris Press Bitter to British Proposal."

The forward march together of Great Britain and France is after the manner of pigs going to market one proceeding northeast, the other squealing its head off because its master checks its endeavor to go southwest.

He might go along with the powers of Europe a little way. But even rubber has its snapping point. You can stretch it too bled far. It is the special duty of Washington at this stage in the affairs of the world to do what it can in the way of forward marching without coming out of the business broke.

COMMENT ON DAY'S NEWS

By HENRY JAMES

One of the cherished conventions of the senate is that a vote of thanks shall be tendered to the vice president at the adjournment of a session. This is done whether the attention is merited or not. By it the senate is paying tribute to itself and tradition.

There is a senator named Heflin. He hails from Alabama. His name seldom is mentioned unless he has been figuring in a controversy marked by such evidences of acrimony as rarely get into the records, or getting there, are carefully expunged on motion of some senator speaking in whispers.

This year Heflin would not permit the usual resolution of thanks to get by. He had a grudge against the presiding officer, and far from not caring who knew it, wanted everybody to know it. He said that he would filibuster against the resolution, and as that was a spectacle that his associates could not endure they yielded, and permitted him to have his boorish way.

Heflin seems to be a scrappy sort. Apparently he is out of place in a senate. In a village caucus he might cut a better figure.

A bill has been introduced at Sacramento, by the terms of which girls will not arrive at legal majority until the age of twenty-one. At present the legal majority arrives for them at eighteen. Then they may be free of guardianship, marry without the consent of parents, and be full citizens, except that they are not allowed to vote. The brother of the girl is not permitted to shake off the trammels of boyhood until twenty-one.

It is true that some girls mature earlier than boys. It also is true that some of them don't. The boy of eighteen is far more likely to be hustling for a living than the girl of eighteen. It hardly has seemed fair to imply his mental inferiority.

Allegations are made that a gentleman in Washington committed suicide because of failure to obtain a high executive position in the government. Perhaps this failure, if there had been such failure, had nothing to do with the matter.

It is said that a heavyweight fighter is suffering from concussion of the brain. Perhaps this represents a flattering judgment. It is amusing to observe that Andy Gallagher of San Francisco heads the objectors to the address scheduled to be delivered by Admiral Sims, retired, to the students at Berkeley. Gallagher would prefer to deliver an address there himself. There would be no danger that he would talk over the heads of an audience; of any audience. He is a local politician always with a job or a hope of one. Admiral Sims is a patriotic American, who has given his country splendid service. Because he has said friendly words of Great Britain, professional haters of England do him the honor to include him in their desirable condemnation.

WATCHING THE PARADE

By JOHN PILGRIM

It must be a tremendous handicap in this world to have the name of being a failure. It had not occurred to me until I ran across Clark Daugherty the other day for the first time in years.

"What are you doing now, Clark?" I asked, indifferently. "Same old thing?"

"What same old thing do you mean?" he asked. I could not tell him.

As far back as I can remember him Clark was regarded as a failure by every one except Clark. Even his mother weakened on him. He was in love with a girl, but her folks talked her out of it. They said Clark was sort of do-less. Nice, honorable, kindly, intelligent, gentle—one could add adjectives for half a day—but a failure.

He ran for office on the capital of a wide acquaintance and some excellent morals, and was beaten by a grifter. He went into business and failed, and held his nose on the grindstone for years to pay his debts. He was always the first to be laid off in hard times. Not that his work was not as good as that of others, but he was a failure. No one piles failures. He was always the last to get a job, although he hunted conscientiously. Why should a failure be given work?

"I came mighty near being discouraged in those days," said Clark, meditatively. "It seemed as though there were a hoodoo on me. I was tagged as a failure, and that was enough to make everything I touched fail."

Even yet I can hardly bring myself to believe that he is not a failure. I think of him with a certain condescension. Yet he is the biggest man the old home town ever turned out. Money is never a measure of man-value, but he could buy and sell the rest of us.

By comparison, the rest of us have failed.

NINTH INSTALLMENT

Chapter XVI—Continued

Meanwhile the party about Lillian drew nearer. He felt with instinctive certainty that the supper-room was its destination, but he remained motionless, held by a species of fatalism. He watched her draw near with an unmoved face, but in the brief space that passed while she traversed the corridor, he gauged to the full the hold that the new atmosphere, the new existence, had gained over his mind. With an unlooked-for rush of feeling he realized now dearly he would part with it.

As Lillian came closer, the meaning of her manner became clearer to him. She talked incessantly, laughing now and then, but her eyes were never quiet. These skimmed the length of the corridor, then glanced over the heads crowded in the door.

"I'll have something quite sweet, Geoffrey," she was saying to the man beside her, as she came within hearing. "You know what I like—a sort of snowflake wrapped up in sugar." As she said the words her glance wandered. Loder saw it rest uninterestedly on a boy a yard or two in front of him, then move to the man over whose head he gazed, then lift itself inevitably to his face.

The glance was quick and direct. He saw the look of recognition spring across it; he saw her move forward suddenly as the crowd in the corridor parted to let her pass. Then he saw what seemed to him a miracle.

Her whole expression altered, her lips parted, and she colored with annoyance. She looked like a spoiled child who, seeing a bonbon-box, opens it—to find it empty.

As the press about the door-way melted to give her passage, the red-haired man in front of Loder was the first to take advantage of the space. "Jove! Lillian," he said, moving forward, "you look as if you expected Chilcote to be somebody else, and are disappointed to find he's only himself!" He laughed delightedly at his own joke.

The words were exactly the tonic that Lillian needed. She smiled her usual undisturbed smile as she turned her eyes upon him.

"My dear Leonard, you're using your eye-glass; when that happens you're never responsible for what you see." Her words came more slowly and with a touch of languid amusement. Her composure was suddenly restored.

Then for the first time Loder changed his position. Moved by an impulse he made no effort to dismount, he stepped back to Eve's side and slipped his arm through hers—successfully concealing his left hand.

The warmth of her skin through her long glove thrilled him unexpectedly. His impulse had been one of self-defence, but the result was of a different character. At the quick contact the wish to fight for—to hold and defend—the position that had grown so dear woke in renewed force. With a new determination he turned again towards Lillian.

"I caught the same impression—without an eye-glass," he said. "Why did you look like that?" He asked the question steadily and with apparent carelessness, though, through it all, his reason stood against—his common-sense cried aloud that it was impossible for the eyes that had seen his face in admiration, in love, in contempt, to fall now in recognition. The air seemed breathless while he spoke and waited. His impression of Lillian was a mere shimmering of gold dress and gold hair; all that he was really conscious of was the pressure of his hand on Eve's arm and the warmth of her skin through the soft glove. Then, abruptly, the mist lifted. He saw Lillian's eyes—indifferent, amused, slightly contemptuous; and a second later he heard her voice.

"My dear Jack," she said sweetly, "how absurd of you! It was simply the contrast of your eyes peering over Leonard's hair. It was like a gorgeous sunset with a black cloud overhead." She laughed. "Do you see what I mean, Eve?" She affected to see Eve for the first time.

Eve had been looking calmly ahead. She turned now and smiled serenely. Loder felt no vibration of the arm he held, yet by an instant's intuition he knew that the two women were antagonistic. He experienced it with the divination that follows upon a moment of acute suspense. He understood it, as he had understood Lillian's look of recognition when his forehead, eyes, and nose had shown him to be himself; her blank surprise when his close-shaven lip and chin had proclaimed him, Chilcote.

He felt like a man who has looked into an abyss and stepped back from the edge, outwardly calm but mentally shaken. The commonplaces of life seemed for the moment to hold deeper meanings. He did not hear Eve's answer, he paid no heed to Lillian's next remark. He saw her smile and turn to the red-haired man; finally he saw her move on to the supper-room, followed by her little court. Then he pressed the arm he was still holding. He felt an urgent need of companionship—of a human expression to the crisis he had passed.

"Shall we get out of this?" he asked again.

Eve looked up. "Out of the room?" she said.

He looked down at her, compelling her gaze. "Out of the room—and the house," he answered. "Let us go—home."

CHAPTER XVII

THE necessary formalities of departure were speedily got through. The passing of the corridors, the gaining of the carriage, seemed to Loder to be marvellously simple proceedings. Then, as he sat by Eve's side and again felt the forward movement of the horses, he had leisure for the first time to wonder whether the time that had passed since last he occupied that position had actually been lived through.

Only that night he had unconsciously compared one incident in his life to a sketch in which the lights and shadows have been obliterated and lost. Now that picture rose before him, startlingly and incredibly intact. He saw the sunlit houses of Santasalar, backgrounded by the sunlit hills—saw them as plainly as when he himself had sketched them on his memory. Every detail of the scene remained the same, even to the central figure; only the eye and the hand of the artist had changed.

At this point Eve broke in upon his thoughts. Her first words were curiously coincidental.

"What did you think of Lillian Asstrupp to-night?" she asked. "Wasn't her gown perfect?"

Loder lifted his head with an almost guilty start. Then he answered straight from his thoughts.

"I—I didn't notice it," he said; "but her eyes reminded me of a cat's eyes—and she walks like a cat. I never seemed to see it—until to-night."

Eve changed her position. "She was very artistic," she said, tentatively. "Don't you think the gold gown was beautiful with her pale-colored hair?"

Loder felt surprised. He was convinced that Eve disliked the other and he was not sufficiently versed in women to understand her praise. "I thought—" he began. Then he wisely stopped. "I didn't see the gown," he substituted.

Eve looked out of the window. "How unappreciative men are!" she said. But her tone was strangely free from censure.

After this there was silence until Grosvenor Square was reached. Having left the carriage and passed into the house, Eve paused for a moment at the foot of the stairs to give an order to Crapham, who was still in attendance in the hall; and again Loder had an opportunity of studying her. As he looked, a sharp comparison rose to his mind.

"A fairy princess!" he had heard the red-haired man say as Lillian Asstrupp came into view along the Bramfells' corridor, and the simile had seemed particularly apt. With her grace, her delicacy, her subtle attraction, she might well be the outcome of imagination. But with Eve it was different. She also was graceful and attractive—but it was grace and attraction of a different order.

One was beautiful with the beauty of the white rose that springs from the hot-house and withers at the first touch of cold; the other with the beauty of the wild rose on the cliffs above the sea, that keeps its petals fine and transparent in face of salt spray and wet mist. Eve, too, had her realm, but it was the realm of real things. A great confidence, a feeling that here one might rely even if all other faiths were shaken, touched him suddenly. For a moment he stood irresolute, watching her mount the stairs with her easy, assured step. Then a determination came to him. Fate favored him to-night; he was in luck to-night. He would put his fortune to one more test. He swung across the hall and ran up the stairs.

His face was keen with interest as he reached her side. The hard outline of his features and the hard grayness of his eyes were softened as when he had paused to talk with Lakely. Action was the breath of his life, and his face changed under it as another's might change under the influence of stirring music or good wine.

Eve saw the look and again the uneasy expression of surprise crossed her eyes. She paused, her hand resting on the banister.

Loder looked at her directly. "Will you come into the study—as you came that other night? There's something I want to say." He spoke quietly. He felt master of himself and of her.

She hesitated, glanced at him, and then glanced away.

"Will you come?" he said again. And as he said it his eyes rested on the sweep of her thick eyelashes, the curve of the black hair.

At last her lashes lifted, and the perplexity and doubt in her blue eyes stirred him. Without waiting for her answer, he leaned forward.

"Say yes!" he urged. "I don't often ask for favors."

Still she hesitated; then her decision was made for her. With a new boldness he reached her arm, drawing her forward gently but decisively towards Chilcote's rooms.

In the study a fire burned brightly, the desk was laden with papers, the

THE CHARACTERS IN THE STORY

JOHN CHILCOTE, member of the House of Commons, is a confirmed drug addict and a party to a loveless marriage. On a night marked by the blackest fog in years, while walking from Parliament, he jostles a stranger. Lighting his cigarette, he is astonished to note that the other man is his exact counterpart. They exchange cards, the stranger's revealing him to be

JOHN LODER. Depressed and unstrung the next morning, Chilcote seeks solace in the company of LADY ASSTRUP, then goes to Parliament, where he makes a near spectacle of himself. Desperate, he induces Loder to change places in life with him. So successful is the deception that Loder not only becomes a strong political lieutenant of FRAIDE, the great party leader, but is never suspected by the servants or by Chilcote's wife.

EVE, At a social function Loder is inveigled into a darkened tent where Lady Lillian Asstrupp, indulging her hobby of crystal gazing, makes him remove his rings, exposing the give-away scar on his finger. Realizing he has made a great mistake Loder induces young BLESSINGTON to tell her that the darkness had deceived her in her first belief that it was Chilcote in the tent. He is attempting to make his departure with Eve from the Bramfells home when Lady Asstrupp moves toward him.

For an instant he stayed motionless; then very quietly he drew away from her, releasing her hands. [Guy Bates Post as John Loder and Ruth Sinclair as Eve Chilcote in "The Masquerader."] lights were nicely adjusted; even the chairs were in their accustomed places. Loder's senses responded to each suggestion. It seemed but a day since he had seen it last. It was precisely as he had left it—the niche needing but the man.

To hide his emotion he crossed the floor quickly and drew a chair forward. In less than six hours he had run up and down the scale of emotions. He had looked despair in the face, till the sudden sight of Chilcote had lifted him to the skies; since then, surprise had assailed him in its strongest form; he had known the full meaning of the word "risk"; and from every contingency he had come out conqueror. He bent over the chair as he pulled it forward, to hide the expression in his eyes.

"Sit down," he said gently. Eve moved towards him. She moved slowly, as if half afraid. Many emotions stirred her—distrust, uncertainty, and a curious half-dominant, half-suppressed questioning that it was difficult to define. Loder remembered her shrinking coldness, her reluctant tolerance on the night of his first coming, and his individuality, his certainty of power, his kindled afresh. Never had he been so vehemently himself; never had Chilcote seemed so complete a shadow.

As Eve seated herself, he moved forward and leaned over the back of her chair. The impulse that had filled him in his interview with Rendwick that had goaded him as he drove to the reception, was dominant again.

"I tried to say something as we drove to the Bramfells to-night," he began. "Like many men who possess eloquence for an impersonal cause, he was brusque, even blunt, in the stating of his own case. 'May I thank back, and go on from where I broke off?'"

Eve half turned. Her face was still puzzled and questioning. "Of course." She sat forward again, clasping her hands.

He looked thoughtfully at the back of her head, at the slim outline of her shoulders, the glitter of the diamonds about her neck.

"Do you remember the day, three weeks ago, that we talked together in this room? The day a great many things seemed possible?"

"This time she did not look round. She kept her gaze upon the fire.

"Do you remember?" he persisted, quietly. In his college days men who heard that tone of quiet persistence had been wont to lose heart. Eve heard it now for the first time, and without being aware, answered to it.

"Yes, I remember," she said. "On that day you believed in me—"

In his earnestness he no longer slanted Chilcote; he spoke with his own steady reliance. He saw Eve still, unclasp and clasp her hands, but he went steadily on. "On that day you saw me as a new light. You acknowledged me. He emphasized the slightly nervous word. "But since that day"—his voice quickened—"since that day your feelings have that night he remembered Chilcote and forgot himself.

Eve lifted her head with a quick gesture—as if, in flinging off discretion and silence, she appreciated to the full the new relief of speech.

"Yes, I knew. Perhaps I should have spoken when I first surprised the secret, but it's all so past that it's useless to speculate now. It was fate, I suppose. I was very young, you were very unapproachable, and—and we had no love to make the way easy." For a second her glance faltered and she looked away. "A woman's—a girl's—disillusioning is a very sad comedy—it should never have an audience." She laughed a little bitterly as she looked back again. "I saw all the deceptions, all the subtleties, all the—lies." She said the word deliberately, meeting his eyes.

Again he thought of Chilcote, but his face paled.

"I saw it all. I lived with it all till I grew hard and indifferent—till I acquiesced in your 'nerves' as readily as the rest of the world that hadn't suspected and didn't know." Again she laughed nervously. "And I thought the indifference would last forever. If one lives in a groove for years, one gets frozen up; I never felt more frozen than on the night Mr. Fraide spoke to me of you—asked me to use my influence; then, on that night—"

"Yes. On that night?" Loder's voice was tense.

But her excitement had suddenly fallen. Whether his glance had quelled it or whether the force of her feelings had worked itself out it was impossible to say, but her eyes had lost their resolution. She stood hesitating for a moment, then she turned and moved to the mantel-piece.

"That night you found me changed?" Loder was insistent.

"Changed—and yet not changed." She spoke reluctantly, with averted head.

"And what did you think?"

Again she was silent; then again a faint excitement tinged her cheeks. "I thought—" she began. "It seemed—" Once more she paused, hampered by her own uncertainty, her own sense of puzzling incongruity.

"I don't know why I speak like this," she went on at last, as if in justification of herself, "or why I want to speak. But a feeling—an extraordinary, incomprehensible feeling seems to urge me on. The same feeling that came to me on the day we had tea together—the feeling that made me—that almost made me believe—"

"Believe what?" The words escaped him without volition.

At sound of his voice she turned. "Believe that a miracle had happened," she said—"that you had found strength—had freed yourself."

"From morphia?"

"From morphia."

In the silence that followed, Loder lived through a century of suggestion and indecision. His first feeling was for himself, but his first clear thought was for Chilcote and their compact. He stood, metaphorically, on a stone in the middle of a stream, balancing on one foot, then the other; looking to the right bank, then the left. At last, as it always did, inspiration came to him slowly. He realized that by one plunge he might save both Chilcote and himself!

He crossed quickly to the fireplace and stood by Eve. "You were right in your belief," he said. "For all that time—from the night you spoke to me of Fraide to the day you had tea in his room—I never touched a drug."

She moved suddenly, and he saw her face. "John," she said, unsteadily, "you—I—I have known you to lie to me—about other things."

With a hasty movement he averted his head. The doubt, the appeal to her words shocked him. The whole isolation of her life seemed summed up in the one short sentence. For the instant he forgot Chilcote. With a reaction of feeling he turned to her again.

"Look at me!" he said, brusquely. She raised her eyes.

"Do you believe I'm speaking the truth?"

She searched his eyes intently, the doubt and hesitancy still struggling in her face.

"But the last three weeks?" she said, reluctantly. "How can you ask me to believe?"

He had expected this, and he met it steadily enough; nevertheless his courage faltered. "To deceive this woman, even to justify myself, had in the last half hour become something sacrilegious."

"The last three weeks must be buried," he said, hurriedly. "No man could free himself suddenly from—"

from a vice. He broke off abruptly. He hated Chilcote; he hated himself. Then Eve's face, raised in distressed appeal, overshadowed all scruples.

"You have been silent and patient for years," he said, suddenly. "Can you be patient and silent a little longer?" He spoke without consideration. He was conscious of no selfishness beneath his words. In the selfish exercise of conscious strength the primitive desire to reduce all elements to his own sovereignty submerged every other emotion. "I can't enter into the thing," he said.

"Like you, I give no explanations."

"You know—for four years?" he said, very slowly. For the first time myself—in the full possession of my reason, the full knowledge of my own capacities. The man you have known in the last three weeks, the man you have imagined in the last four years, is a shadow, an unreality—a weakness in human form. There is a new Chilcote—if you will only see him."

Eve was trembling as he ceased; her face was flushed; there was a strange brightness in her eyes. She was moved beyond herself.

"But the other you—the old you?"

"You must be patient." He looked down into the fire. "Times like the last three weeks will come again—must come again; they are inevitable. When they do come, you must shut your eyes—you must blind yourself. You must ignore them—and me. Is it a compact?" He still avoided her eyes.

She turned to him quietly. "Yes—if you wish it," she said, below her breath.

He was conscious of her glance, but he dared not meet it. He felt sick at the part he was playing, yet he held to it tenaciously.

"I wonder if you could do what few men and fewer women are capable of?" he asked, at last. "I wonder if you could learn to live in the present?" He lifted his head slowly and met her eyes.

"This is an experiment," he went on. "And, like all experiments, it has good phases and bad. When the bad phases come round I—I want you to tell yourself that you are not altogether alone in your unhappiness—that I am suffering too—in another way."

There was silence when he had spoken, and for a space it seemed that Eve would make no response. Then the last surprise in a day of surprises came to him. With a slight stir, a slight quick rustle of skirts, she stepped forward and laid her hand in his.

The gesture was simple and very sweet; her eyes were soft and full of light as she raised her face to his, her lips parted in unconscious appeal.

There is no surrender so seductive as the surrender of a proud woman. Loder's blood stirred, the undeniable suggestion of the moment thrilled and disconcerted him in a tumult of thought. Honor, duty, principle rose in a triple barrier; but honor, duty, and principle are but words to a headstrong man. The full significance of his position came to him as he had never come before. His hand closed on hers; he bent towards her, his pulses beating unevenly.

"Eve!" he said. Then at sound of his voice he suddenly hesitated. It was the voice of a man who has forgotten everything but his own existence.

For an instant he stayed motionless; then very quietly he drew away from her, releasing her hands.

"No," he said. "No—I haven't got the right."

CHAPTER XVIII

THAT night, for almost the first time since he had adopted his dual role, Loder slept ill. He was not a man over whom imagination held any powerful sway—his doubts and misgivings seldom ran to speculation upon future possibilities; nevertheless, the fact that, consciously or unconsciously, he had adopted a new attitude towards Eve came home to him with unpleasant force during the hours of darkness; and long before the first hint of daylight had slipped through the heavy window-curtains he had arranged a plan of action—a plan wherein, by the simple method of altogether avoiding her, he might soothe his own conscience and safeguard Chilcote's domestic interests.

It was a satisfactory if a somewhat negative arrangement, and he rose next morning with a feeling that things had begun to shape themselves. But chance sometimes has a disconcerting knack of forestalling even our best-planned schemes. He dressed slowly, and descended to his solitary breakfast with the pleasant sensation of having put last night's over of a new leaf; but scarcely had he opened Chilcote's letters, scarcely had he taken a cursory glance at the morning's newspaper, than it was borne in upon him that not only a new leaf, but a whole sheet of new leaves had been turned in his prospects—by a hand infinitely more powerful and arbitrary than his own. He realized within the space of a few moments that the leisure he might have claimed, the leisure he might have been tempted to devote to her, was no longer his to dispose of—being already demanded of him from a quarter that allowed of no refusal.

For the first rumbling of the political earthquake that was to shake the country made itself audible beyond denial, on that morning of March 27th, when the news spread through England that, in view of the disorganized state of the Persian army and the Shah's consequent inability to suppress the open insurrection of the border tribes in the north-eastern districts of Meshed, Russia, with a great show of magnanimity, had come to the rescue by despatching a large armed force from her military station at Merv across the Persian frontier to the seat of the disturbance.

To many hundreds of Englishmen who read their papers on that morning this announcement conveyed but little. That there is such a country as Persia we all know, that English interests in the north we have all superficially understood from childhood; but in this knowledge, coupled with the fact that Persia is comfortably far away, we are apt to rest content. It is only to the eyes that see through long-distance glasses, the minds that regard the present as nothing more nor less than an inevitable link joining the future to the past, that this distant, debatable land stands out in its true political significance.

To the average reader of news the statement of Russia's move seemed scarcely more important than had the first report of the border risings in January, but to the men who had watched the growth of the disturbance it came charged with portentous meaning. Through the entire ranks of the opposition, from Fraide himself downward, it caused a thrill of expectation—that peculiar prophetic sensation that every politician has experienced at some moment of his career.

In no member of his party did this feeling strike deeper than in Loder. Imbued with a lifelong interest in the Eastern question, specially equipped by personal knowledge to hold and proclaim an opinion upon Persian affairs, he read the signs and portents with instinctive insight. Seated at Chilcote's table, surrounded by Chilcote's letters and papers, he forgot the breakfast that was slowly growing cold, forgot the interests and dangers, personal or pleasurable, of the night before, while his mental eyes persistently conjured up the map of Persia, traveling with steady deliberation from Merv to Meshed, from Meshed to Herat, from Herat to the empire of India! For it was not the fact that the Hazaras had risen against the Shah that occupied the thinking mind, nor was it the fact that Russian and not Persian troops were destined to subdue them, but the deeply important consideration that an armed Russian force had crossed the frontier and was encamped within twenty miles of Meshed—Meshed, upon which covetous Russian eyes have rested ever since the days of Peter the Great.

So Loder's thoughts ran as he read and reread the news from the varying political stand-points, and so they continued to run when some hours later, an urgent telephone message from the St. George's Gazette asked him to call at Lakely's office.

The message was interesting as well as imperative, and he made an instant response. The thought of Lakely's keen eyes and shrewd enthusiasms always possessed strong attractions for his own slower temperament, but even had this impetus been lacking, the knowledge that at the St. George's offices, if anywhere, the true feelings of the party were invariably voiced would have drawn him without hesitation.

It was scarcely twelve o'clock when he turned the corner of the tall building, but already the keen spirit that Lakely everywhere diffused was making itself felt. Loder smiled to himself as his eyes fell on the day's placards with their uncompromising headings, and passed onward from the string of gayly painted carts drawn up to receive their first consignment of the paper to the troop of eager newsboys passing in and out of the big swing doors with their piled-up bundles of the early edition; and with a renewed thrill of anticipation and energy he passed through the doorway and ran up stairs.

Passing unchallenged through the long corridor that led to Lakely's office, he caught a fresh impression of action and vitality from the click of the tape machines in the subeditor's office, and a glimpse through the open door of the subeditors themselves, each occupied with his particular task; then without time for further observation he found himself at Lakely's door. Without waiting to knock, as he had felt compelled to do on the one or two previous occasions that business had brought him there, he immediately turned the handle and entered the room.

Editors' offices differ but little in general effect. Lakely's surroundings were rather more elaborate than is usual, as became the dignity of the oldest Tory evening paper, but the atmosphere was unmistakable. As Loder entered he glanced up from the desk at which he was sitting, but instantly returned to his task of looking through and marking the pile of early evening editions that were spread around him. His coat was off and hung on the chair behind him, and he pulled vigorously on a long cigar.

"Hullo! That's right," he said, ironically. "Make yourself comfortable half a second, while I skim the St. Stephen's."

His salutation pleased Loder. With a nod of acquiescence he crossed the office to the brick fire that burned in the grate.

For a minute or two Lakely worked steadily, occasionally breaking the quiet by an unintelligible remark or a vigorous stroke of his pencil. At last he dropped the paper with a gesture of satisfaction and leaned back in his chair.

'COMMUNION,' REV. COLE'S MORNING SUBJECT

'The Live Coal Treatment' Evening Sermon at Central Christian

Rev. Clifford A. Cole's morning sermon theme yesterday was "Erecting a Memorial," and he read as a scripture lesson Luke's account of the last supper in the upper room in Jerusalem, during the week by the Passover, the Jewish national feast that drew devout believers from all parts of Palestine and the then known world.

"We disciples of Christ," said the speaker, "give a prominent place in our worship to the communion, because we believe it to be of first importance. It is a monument to our Christ and He commanded its observance. Just as the flag, a piece of white muslin or silk, with its two designs in colors, thrills us because it represents our country, so this bread and fruit of the vine stir our hearts to the utmost because they bring to our memory the greatest sacrifice ever made—that of our Christ on the cruel cross, where His life blood was poured out that we might have remission of sins and life eternal. All over the world this sacred observance is held—in our own country, all over Europe, in India, China and Japan, aye, even in darkest Africa's jungles, the Savior's wonderful sacrifice for the love of mankind, is held up to adoration by His humble worshippers.

"By this observance we reach back through the centuries to the bleeding heart of our Christ. And who should partake? All who love Him, no matter how weak and imperfect they may be for by His divine touch we are made stronger. It is our renewed confession of faith.

"How often should it be observed? Luke says in the Acts that the early disciples met on the first day of the week to break bread and history confirms his statement. As long as the early church observed this custom did it retain and enlarge its power. But when

UNAFRAID

Give us a nation of men unafraid, As were once the patriots gallant who made A flag and a country and left them in trust To freedom, untarnished with greed or with lust. Give us a nation of men unashamed, Of patriots watchful and heroes unnamed Who fight the same battle our forefathers made, Give us a nation of men unafraid.

Give us brave men who are strong and clear-eyed, Give us Revere again, boldly to ride, Henry to thrill us and Franklin to teach, Courage in action and truth in clear speech. Give us a Washington, kingly and great, That mighty soul of his pledged to the state, Dauntless, unswerving, unselfish, his blade Leaping and flashing—a man unafraid.

Give us a Lincoln, with nothing of art, Mighty of soul and with love in his heart, Lifting the bleeding slave out of the dust, Kindly and tender and human and just. You, who are free men, who live by the bread Of lives given for freedom and blood freely shed, Hear ye the prayer by our forefathers prayed: Give us a nation of men unafraid.

this was disregarded and man changed the form of observance, disaster resulted and the church fell into sin and decay. Jesus said, 'As oft as ye do this, do it in memory of Me.' So we, as His humble followers, wishing to do His will, follow His command and the example of the early church by observing this precious memorial on every first day of the week, for that day is sacred to the memory of an undying love."

The topic for the evening service was "The Live Coal Treatment" and again Luke's gospel furnished the background. The speaker read a portion of the sixth chapter, that part often called "The sermon on the plain," in which the Master reiterated some of the teachings given in the "Sermon on the Mount," those in which He commanded His followers to always return good for evil. Paul sums up the same exhortation in the words, "If thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him to drink and you shall thereby heap coals of fire on his head," said the speaker, who declared that the above teachings faithfully carried out would revolutionize the world and solve every one of the problems that are now so perplexing.

THE NAME "RUSSIA"

was probably derived from "Rous," the name given by the Finns to the early Norman adventurers.

DRIFTING AWAY FROM GOD, TOLD BY DR. FUNK

Drifting away from God was the theme of Dr. H. C. Funk yesterday at the First Lutheran church.

The mother of an imbecile child gave up society, and almost everything else, to devote herself to her unfortunate child. After 14 years she said, "I have loved my child all these years, and cared for him tenderly, but he does not even know me." I wonder if there may not be some one here today of whom the good and gracious God could say, "I have created you, loved you, watched over you, cared for you, and you do not even know me."

God has created you for a noble purpose. Your heart throbs are the pulsing of a wonderful piece of machinery. What is it beating for? What are your aims in life? Are you going anywhere? Or are you just drifting with the tide, leading an aimless and godless life?

Listen: it is a dangerous thing to drift.

After an awful storm on board a ship at sea, Dr. Chapman asked the captain if such a storm was not the worst thing he feared at sea. "No, such storms are very common," said the captain. "Well, then, of whom do you fear most?" His answer was, "A derelict." That is a ship that bears no compass, no sailors, no chart, no commander, and sails into no port—just drifts. Some of you folks have no church home, just drifting; alas, it may be drifting away from God.

In the early days of the Canadian west a Scotchman named Duncan McArthur and his wife Janet ranched a tract of land about forty miles west of the steel town of Verona.

Duncan was a past master at the national accomplishment and on market days always returned home gloriously drunk. Janet's schemes to convert him always failed, but in desperation she tried once more. One market day she said: "Duncan, every time you take a drink today, I'm going to take one too."

The incorrigible Duncan replied: "Then you'll be gude and drunk by 6 o'clock, Mrs. McArthur."
